EVALUATING WEB PAGES

Anyone can post anything to the Web at any time. The only real restriction is federal copyright law, which protects the rights of owners from seeing their material used without compensation; besides that limitation, anything goes. Evaluate sites based on the criteria listed below. Do not use sites that fail your evaluation: there are plenty of other good sites you can use.

- Accuracy: “exact, precise, correct, as the result of care” -- does the site misstate or misrepresent facts? does the site contain errors?
- Authority: “an expert” -- who created the site and what are their affiliations and credentials?
- Bias: “to incline to one side” -- does the site offer a point of view or opinion?
- Coverage: “the extent of reporting” -- how much information is there?
- Currency: “in progress” -- when was the site last updated? how new is the information?
